Score for an Interspecies Audience Awaiting *Trio A

Tape out a 20' × 20' grid. Subdivide into twenty-five 4' × 4' squares. One human being and one plant will occupy each square. The audience listens to four minutes of silence, followed by music. The music must be a re-recording of a number one song on the Billboard R&B/Hip-Hop Charts from three years prior to the enactment of this score.

A Program for Plants is a collaborative research project by Joshi Radin, Brian M. John and Linda Tegg, mentored by Dr. Giovanni Aloï. A Program for Plants is supported by the Earl and Brenda Shapiro Center for Research & Collaboration through the EAGER grant program. aprogramforplants.com

Brian M. John

Brian M. John is interested in the ways that our relationship to the world is mediated by images and technology. He investigates this mediation through photography, video, sound, music and software programming. This diversity of tools and materials stems from a background in web design and development, networking, music, film and animation in addition to photography. As an image-maker and a technologist, John manipulates sound, light, color and space in order to reconfigure the latent possibilities of technical apparatuses. Selected group exhibitions include: Mercury, The LeRoy Neiman Center Gallery, SAIC, Chicago, Illinois, 2015; Surface Area, Studio 109, Brooklyn, New York, 2014; New Constructions, Pump Project's Flex Space, Austin, Texas, 2014 and Enduring Women, The Bullock Texas State History Museum, Austin, Texas, 2013.
